

The CHSAP Chronicle: Special Science Week Edition February 17-21, 2014

SCIENCE WEEK DEEMED GREAT SUCCESS!

Monday started off with a bang and a squish. CHSAP kids participated in a variety of experiments based on the classic show Bill Nye the Science Guy. They did coffee chromatography, created colorful gluep, and built racetracks for marbles. In the afternoon, they marveled at the insect world while watching the film, Microcosmos.

On Tuesday, the kids learned all about how milk is prepared on a field trip to the Cornell Dairy. The kids loved riding the TCAT bus there and back. The trip ended with a sweet treat: Cornell Dairy ice cream! In the afternoon, the children learned how to make bread, and CHSAP parent Abe Stroock came and made bubble structures with them.

Wednesday was all about the earth. The Museum of the Earth brought their travelling exhibits, "Dinosaur Digging" and "Ancient Seas over New York", to us at CHSAP. The kids then had the opportunity to build and explode their own volcanoes!

No week of science would be complete without a trip to the Ithaca Sciencenter, and that is just where we went on Thursday. The kids had a great time exploring the museum. In the afternoon, visitors from the Cornell CLASSE lab came and helped us build real working cars out of found objects. So cool!

Friday was all about animals. In the morning, the Cornell Herpetological society regaled us with their snakes, frogs, and lizards. In the afternoon, we flew high with the Cornell Raptors.

Please check out all the pictures from Science Week on the next page. We had so much fun, we can hardly wait to do it again!

STAFF MEMBER OF THE WEEK: ROSE MCCOOL

Rose McCool is from San Diego, California. She is a sophomore at Ithaca College and is studying Speech Language Pathology. She hopes to one day be a speech therapist at an elementary school.

CONGRATULATIONS, KYRILL AND NIC!

Congratulations to Kyrill and Nic, the first and second place winners in the first ever Dr. Who Fan Art Contest!
